Resilience from an Indigenous Perspective Peak Resilience

Aboriginal Peoples in Canada have diverse narratives of resilience based on their various unique histories and cultures/languages. Featured Narratives of Resilience: The Mi Kmaq People of Atlantic Canada (approximately 40 000 people) define their resilience as how they navigated the Watertown Treaty of 1776 with the British.

Shifting to 21st Century Thinking Postmodernism

These ideas have long been criticised by people from groups who are marginalised by them (e.g. women, indigenous peoples, and working-class people). Post-modernism is basically a critique of these ideas. According to one theorist, post modernism is the passage from solid (stable) times to liquid times (Bauman 2007).
